The convention will host a series of workshops and continuing education seminars for license renewal. Among them are Chiropractic Sports Medicine for the 90s led by Dr. Philip T. Santiago and Diagnosis and Management of Musculo-Skeletal Conditions led by Dr. Frank J. Nicchi.

Dr. Santiago is associate professor of sports medicine at New York Chiropractic College.

Dr. Nicchi has served on the faculty of New York Chiropractic College where he has instructed clinical orthopedics and neurology, differential diagnosis and flexion-distraction technique.

Presently there are over 300 black chiropractors practicing throughout the United States. The ABCA was established to promote better health care in the black community, to educate the public on the benefits of chiropractic medicine, and to assist the educational endeavors of those interested in the chiropractic profession.
